WILD STYLE

Local designer Lucy Wild creates simple dresses meant to be worn day to night.

By Elizabeth Justice

Never much of a shopper, Canadian Lucy Wild has always relied on a wardrobe of dresses she designed herself. "I was never really able to find what I wanted in stores. In terms of quality or construction," she explains. Two years ago, after being complimented on her outfit and encouraged to design dresses for other women, Wild came up with five designs in four fabrics and asked a friend to host a trunk show. "I sold close to 100 dresses the first day and discovered that they fit all body types," says Wild, who moved to Los Angeles in 2003. The 60 women who attended that trunk show gave her the feedback she needed to create her eponymous collection, which today consists of modern designs made with crisp Japanese cotton and beautiful European construction. Each piece is sewn by a seamstress here in Los Angeles and can be worn with anything from TKEES flip-flops to Manolos. From $325, by appointment, 3813 W. SURF'S UP In addition to surfboards, STAMPD sells sleek apparel and accessories for men.

LUST HAVE HANG TEN

If you thought L.A.'s surfing culture couldn't get any cooler—think again. Contemporary luxury line STAMPD, which just opened its first brick-and-mortar on La Brea, tapped artist Futura (Gilles Leonard McGuire) to create a sleek wave rider exclusive to the outpost. The 5-foot-9-inch Marbleangelo surfboard ($20,000, pictured here) has a swallowtail fish body which offers stability, speed in small waves and wave-catchability, among other benefits. "This was the first time we collaborated with an artist on a medium in which he'd never worked before, in this case a surfboard," explains Chris Stamp, STAMPD's creative director. "Futura drew color inspiration from what he saw in our brand's aesthetic and fine-tuned that into one-of-a-kind masterpieces." Not a surfer? No problem. The board can be displayed in your home as a stunning piece of art. Pretty rad! 130 S. La Brea, L.A., 323.525.1443, stampd.com—Meg McGuire

RIDE ALONG Test your limits and book Flywheel's Fly 60, an hourlong endurance class.

FITNESS FLASH

GLAM SQUAD With the indoor cycling resurgence showing no signs of slowing, bikes are ready to book in the Valley, where two spin meccas have recently opened additional locations. SoulCycle ($30 per class, 966 S. Westlake Blvd., Westlake Village, 805.991.7685, soul-cycle.com) makes its Westlake debut, while Flywheel ($25 per class, 6316 N. Topanga Canyon Blvd., Woodland Hills, 818.850.4047, flywheelssports.com) comes to Woodland Hills. Meanwhile, devotees of the power plate—which uses vibration technology during everything from ballet to strength training—will line up to try West Hollywood's new PLATEFIT ($27 per class, 309 N. Kings Road, West Hollywood, 323.782.1770, platefit.co). Here, workouts reduce cellulite and burn between 500 and 700 calories, all in only 27 minutes. And for those who want a more well-rounded option, there's Uplift Studios ($28 per class, 8254 Melrose Ave., West Hollywood, 323.424.7080, upliftstudios.com), a women-only, New York-based gym which just opened its first West Coast location. With five signature classes offering everything from yoga to cardio, its specialty is the Uplift Express, which improves strength, stamina and tightens your core. Time to hit the studio! —NJC
